Hunza and Nagar are separate districts. Every place in this guide is named in the district where it actually lies.

Pick the season first. The route follows.

Pakistan's north is seasonal in a way few destinations are. Blossom lasts two to three weeks, Deosai is snowbound for most of the year, and the Baltoro trek only runs in high summer. Choose your window, then choose your itinerary.

How to use this guide

Each itinerary matches a trip type on our Plan My Trip form, so you can enquire about the exact route you have just read. Days can be added or trimmed, hotels upgraded, and private or small-group departures arranged. All prices are on enquiry - they depend on group size, season and hotel level, so we quote properly rather than guessing here.

Cultural and religious trips run best in the cooler months in Punjab; both can be combined with the north in spring and autumn. Chitral and the Kalash Valleys run May to October, with the December dot for the Kalash Choimus winter festival by special arrangement. Exact blossom, autumn and festival dates shift with the weather each year - we confirm the best week when you enquire.

Visas - check before you book

Most visitors apply through Pakistan's online visa system, and many nationalities are eligible for visa prior to arrival. Rules and eligibility change, so verify your nationality's current route at the time of booking and apply well ahead of travel. Trekking and restricted-area permits, where needed, are arranged separately.

Flights to Gilgit - always have a Plan B

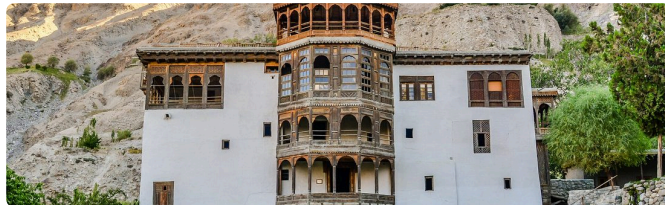

Islamabad-Gilgit and Islamabad-Skardu flights are weather dependent and can be delayed or cancelled, especially in winter. Every northern itinerary in this guide can switch to the Karakoram Highway by road, and we build buffer time into flight-dependent days.

Top Attractions - Full Coverage

The stops the big Pakistan tour operators lead with - Apricot Tours, Pak Adventure, Pakistan Travellers, Vaadi Travels and MyTrip among them - checked against our own routes. If a place travellers ask for by name is not a main day in an itinerary, it is an add-on or extension in this guide. Nothing below is filler: every entry names the district or area it actually sits in.

How it works - legally

Permits are issued through the Gilgit-Baltistan Wildlife Department and hunted through a licensed outfitter in a community-managed conservancy. No hunt is offered outside this system.

Practical planning for 2027

Visas and permits

Apply through Pakistan's online visa system; many nationalities are eligible for visa prior to arrival. Verify your route at booking - eligibility changes. Baltoro trekking, restricted areas and trophy hunting each need their own permits, arranged in advance through the relevant authorities and licensed operators.

Getting to the north

Flights from Islamabad to Gilgit and Skardu are weather dependent in every season. The Karakoram Highway is the backup and, for many travellers, a highlight in itself. Never book a tight international connection on the day you leave the mountains.

Altitude and pacing

Karimabad sits at roughly 2,400 m, Concordia above 4,500 m. These itineraries build in acclimatisation where it matters. Tell us about any health conditions when you enquire, and carry travel insurance that covers your highest activity - trekking and rescue cover for the Baltoro.

What to pack

Layers in every season: even summer nights in Hunza are cold, and Deosai needs a warm jacket in July. Broken-in boots for treks, sun protection at altitude, and modest dress for religious sites - a head covering for gurdwaras and mosques. A full packing list comes with your confirmed booking.

Responsible travel

Carry water in a refillable bottle, take litter out of camps and meadows, dress respectfully in villages and at religious sites, and ask before photographing people. In conservancy areas, your permit and park fees directly fund local conservation and communities.

Money - honestly

No itinerary in this guide carries an invented price. Your quote depends on group size, season, hotel level and current domestic flight and permit costs. Ask, and you will get a clear, itemised price on enquiry - with what is and is not included, in writing.
